WELCOME TO GEORGIAN DUBLIN
Dublin was first colonized by the English.
The year America was still a colony, when King George signed on the throne, was a golden age for architecture in the city. This house is a great example of Georgian Dublin. But what does that mean? And how is it really meant to be? Welcome to the city in general!

*“If I could live in the Little Museum
– and tattoo every member of the team on my arm – I would. Such a good, funny, informative tour.
You want it to last forever.”*

ANIMALS of DUBLIN

The Little MUSEUM of DUBLIN

If you want to know more about a city, meet its animals.

The story of all cities can be told through their birds and their tales show how close the bond is with the earth. This is particularly true in Dublin, with its rich history.

This exhibition is a small survey of animal interactions with Dubliners through the centuries.

VISION

To create the best small city museum in the world.

“The educational programme is well thought out and offers locals the chance to really engage with their cultural heritage. The fact of both local and international visitors being present in equal numbers is a measure of this museum’s success in firmly establishing itself within its community.”

MISSION

To build awareness of Dublin's history with stories, objects and powerful shared experiences in a world-class city museum.

"To get a crash course on all things Dublin, start your day with a visit to the The Little Museum of Dublin. This charming and chock-full museum will teach all you ever wanted to know about the city's recent history—from Queen Victoria's visit in 1900 to the meteoric rise of local band U2."

PURPOSE

To remember
our history,
share it with the world and build civic pride.

---

"One of my favourite attractions is the Little Museum of Dublin, a gem of a place housed in a beautiful Georgian townhouse, filled with material and items which tell a vivid story of 20th Century Dublin. This is history at its most cultivating and human."
